The train was stopped as quickly as possi-ble. The men were carried into an empty building on the corner by mem-bers of the train crew and by-standers.

Peterson Hurt the Worst.

Dr. Charles F. Wilcox, who was attending a patient in the neighborhood, arrived a few minutes after the affair had happened. Peterson was the more seriously hurt, and the doctor's attention was directed to him first. A heart stimulant was given the unconscious man. He regained consciousness long enough to give his name and say that he was from Salem, Utah. Peterson sustained an ugly gash on his head. The scalp was laid open from ear to ear. It was feared that his skull had been fractured. His left leg was broken and his body was cut in several places. After telling his name and address, he lapsed into unconsciousness. Robbins also rallied under the administering of stimulants. He gave his name and said he was from Logan. He was too dazed to say more.

Peterson Likely to Die.

An ambulance was called and the men taken to the St. Mark's hospital, where further investigations failed to discover any further broken bones or internal injuries in either patient. It is not thought Robbins will die. Peterson's condition is critical. While the in-jury to his head was confined to the

It was in order that she might not be disturbed by the clanging of bells, the hiss of escaping steam, the clatter of cars and the thousand rest-destroying noises of a city railroad yard that Madame Calve, through the courtesy of the Oregon Short Line passenger department, had her car placed on a switch at Bountiful yesterday morning. Thither a pligrimage to see her was made.

The singer speaks so little English that she does not trust herself to that tongue at all. Her conversations with those who speak not her native tongue of France are carried on through an interpreter, usually her maid. This was the case yesterday. Mme. Calve appeared in splendid health and spirus. As the years, not so many, either, have left her marvelous voice unharmed, so they have drawn not even the faintest pencilings upon her face. Mme. Calve is to the world of music what the absolute is to chemistry. She is a combination of rare talent and rare beauty.

I have now no connection with the Metropolitan company and will not have any in the future."

"Two Mammas and One Papa!"

The talk drifted to other things, to home matters. The episode of the morning—it had touched Mme. Calve deeply—was repeated. Then Mme. Calve's laugh rippled out and she said something to the maid in rapid French. The maid laughed merrily. Then she said:
